The work has certainly been rushed in a corprising fashion. Six months ago the discinstic fair had barely attained the digraty of an idea emphasized by a few calculations on paper. Today the main buildings and many of the minor ones are being that on the opening day, Jan. 1, 1894, every that on the opening day, Jan. 1, 1894, every that on the opening day, Jan. 1, 1894, every that on the opening day of visitors. or space are pouring in upon the t legins to look as if the only mistake nade so far consisted in not planning more ommodious buildings at the outset. Al-cady amexes to the main structures are eing talked of, and it is apparent that if pyjars not erected or additional space for kilbits supplied in some other way agreat by his not exected or antitional space to thibits supplied in some other way a great anny applications will have to be denied. It seemed in the beginning that the build It seemed in the beginning that the buildings had been planned on a sufficiently generous scale. The Manufactures building is 456 feet in which, the Azricultural building 460 by 290, the Machinery building 350 by 375, and the Finsarts building 155 by 65. Now it is estimated that it each of them were of twice the size inere would be no difficulty in filling them with exhibits.

of a temporary character, but they will be benttiful and imposing nevertheless. They will be built in the same manner as those of the White City in Chicago, of wooden frames, plustered and organizated with staff—that is, all of them but the Pine Arts building will be so constructed. The atter, because of the valuable nature a the works to be shown there, will be fire proof. It is been suit of brick and will remain standing ser the fair is over, the ament firt gailery at some future day. Considerable study has been devoted to be matter of laying out and beautifying the fair grounds. Situated as they are in The neart of Godden Gate park, if was neces-sary to contrive to take every advantage of the charming location, while at the same interfering as little as possible with any of the permanent features of that popular recreation ground. The result has been very successfully accomplished.

The buildings are arranged around a The buildings are arranged around a great quadrangle, with plenty of space between and around them to set them off from each other and swold the impression of crowding them together. The quadrangle will be terraced and laid out in beautiful giewill be terraced and laid out in beautiful process. The grand entrance to the fair will be at the southern end of the quad-rangle, and before it there will be a beauti-ful allegorical fountain.

The fair is to have its Midway plaisance

The fair is to have its Midway plaisance feature, too, and "concessionmaires," as they call these showmen in Chicago, are fairly cumbling over each other in their eagerness to make contracts. All the most popular features of the Chicago Midway will have their counterparts at the Golden Gate, though few or none of them will be exact duplications, the managers shrewdly preferring precisions of the Stepotyped renefitions of ring novelties to stereotyped repetitions o nes with which visitors to Chicago are already familiar.

Among the new things thus to be seen will be a representation of a typical Nevada mining camp of the time when placer mining was still the orthodox method of wasting time, and men's hopes of wealth were chiefly based on their luck in kicking over the right kind of rocks. For this camp it is proposed to accure the veritable cabins in which Fair, Flood, Markay, O'Brien and other famous Big Bonanza kings lived, cooked, ate and did their own washing on Sundays in the days before they "struck it rich." The costumes, characteristics, labor and diversions of the early days are all to and diversions of the early days are all to be faithfully reproduced, and a typical editor, Sam Dayle of the Carson Appeal, will issue a characteristic newspaper in the good old fashioned way, printing it on a band press and publishing it with all its manifold and manifest imperfections.

The railroads have agreed to make reduced raites from eastern points to San Francisco during the fair, and their concessions will add cheapness to the inducements been out to visitors from other lands and states. Never was a bester opportunity afforded for seeing this famed wonderland of the durch, to visit which has been the life dream of so many people. California, with her usual big hearted bospitality, will fing the doors wide open, start up the music and promise everybody a good time, and the loss will be to him who fails to take advantage of the invitation.
